Neuromyth 1

The brain is only plastic for certain kinds of information during specific ‘critical periods’-thereby the first three years of a child are decisive for later development and success in life.

More references:

See also Round Tables section on this website answers to the question: How important are the early years to successful life-long learning?

Click here for more articles by Elissa Newport.

Related documents:
- Neuromyth 2 (English)
- Neuromyth 3 (English)
- Neuromyth 4 (English)
- Neuromyth 5 (English)